Would you be happier using social media if you no longer had to worry about getting new followers or likes? Rates of anxiety, depression and other mental health issues among teens have risen recently and according to health experts, the constant use of social media by teenagers is an underlying reason for the trend. Find out more about why your social-media use affects you more than you think on page 4, and visit metro.us for all the stories you need to know.

MICHAEL HEADS TOWARD FLA PANHANDLE, 13 DEAD

Florida's governor mobilized National Guard troops and ordered Gulf Coast residents to head inland or evacuate as Hurricane Michael churned toward shore on Monday, with the storm forecast to strengthen rapidly before making landfall on Wednesday. Michael was expected to strengthen to a major Category 3 storm by Tuesday with winds over 100 miles per hour, making it one of the most powerful storms to hit the Florida Panhandle in decades, state officials said. The storm was expected to bring up to 12 inches of rain with storm surges up to 12 feet, according to the U.S. National Hurricane Center (NHC). At press time, Michael was a Category 1 hurricane, at the bottom of the five-step Saffir-Simpson scale. Florida Gov. Rick Scott declared a state of emergency in 26 counties along the Florida Panhandle and Big Bend. Locally-ordered evacuations of thousands of homes have begun, with 1,250 National Guard soldiers aiding the process and over 4,000 troops on standby, Scott tweeted. Heavy rains at the weekend caused 13 deaths in Central America after Michael formed off the coast of northern Honduras.

TRUMP SEEKS DISMISSAL OF STORMY HUSH MONEY

President Donald Trump asked a federal judge on Monday to dismiss adult-film actress Stormy Daniels' lawsuit challenging the validity of a $130,000 hush money agreement over a tryst she claimed they had more than a decade ago. In a filing with the U.S. District Court in Los Angeles, Trump's lawyer said the lawsuit by Daniels, whose real name is Stephanie Clifford, is moot because Trump never signed the agreement and has said he will not try to enforce it. "There is no actual controversy between plaintiff and Mr.

Trump," the president's lawyer Charles Harder wrote. Michael Avenatti, who represents Daniels, has said keeping the case alive serves the public interest, and wants Trump to give sworn testimony. "This was anticipated and we are not concerned about it," Avenatti said in an email, referring to the dismissal request. Daniels has claimed to have had a sexual liaison with Trump at a 2006 celebrity golf tournament at Lake Tahoe, which straddles the California-Nevada border. Trump has denied having had sex with Daniels.

LIMO FAILED INSPECTION PRIOR TO FATAL NY CRASH

The limousine that crashed in upstate New York on Saturday, killing 20, failed inspection last month and its driver was not properly licensed, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo said Monday. Saturday's accident, which killed two pairs of newlyweds, four sisters from one family and two brothers from another, was the deadliest U.S. transport crash in nearly a decade, according to federal authorities. The company that owned the 2001 Ford Excursion stretch limousine was being sent a cease and desist order to halt operations until the crash is investigated, Cuomo said at New York City's Columbus Day Parade on Monday. Cuomo's office did not immediately respond to a Reuters request for comment. Before the limousine crashed, on the way to a birthday party, one of the victims, Erin McGowan, texted a friend that the limousine was in bad condition and appeared to have motor trouble, the New York Times reported. McGowan wrote, "The motor is making everyone deaf," the Times said. McGowan's aunt Valerie Abeling told CNN her niece had texted her friend saying that the company had sent the stretch limousine to replace a vehicle that had broken down.

TRUMP, ROSENSTEIN SHARE 'GOOD TALK' ABOARD AF1

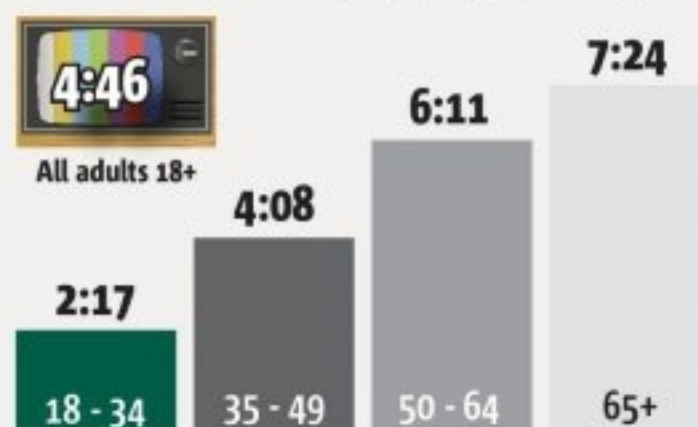

President Donald Trump said he had a "good talk" on Monday with Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, the Justice Department official in charge of the federal investigation of Russian meddling in the 2016 presidential election, and has no plans to fire him. There has been widespread speculation that Trump might oust Rosenstein, a frequent target of Trump's tweeted criticism, after a New York Times report that he had made remarks about Trump's fitness for office and offered to record conversations with him.

Rosenstein traveled with Trump on Air Force One to Orlando on Monday, where the president gave a speech to police chiefs. Upon landing, Rosenstein was seen smiling and appeared at ease as he walked down the front stairs of Air Force One alongside Trump's chief of staff, John Kelly. It was not immediately clear whether Trump and Rosenstein talked about the controversy during their 45-minute-long conversation on the flight, where Kelly and another Department of Justice official, Ed O'Callaghan, were also present.

Social media depresses you, says Kanye West (and actual experts)

Social-media moguls like Twitter's Jack Dorsey are taking seriously the detrimental impact social media has on people's mental health.

ANNA HARSTEDT
letters@metro.us

Would you be happier using social media if you no longer had to worry about getting new followers? Or tons of likes and comments? Kanye West recently spoke out about the detrimental effect of social media on its users.

Rates of anxiety, depression and other mental health issues among teens have risen 70 percent in the past 25 years, according to research by The Roy-

A recent study found that Instagram had the worst impact on teens' mental health, followed closely by Snapchat and Twitter. ISTOCK al Society for Public Health in the U.K. According to those health experts, the constant use of social media by teens is one reason for the struggle.

The study, called "#StatusOfMind," showed that Instagram, followed closely by Snapchat and Twitter, had the worst impact on teens' mental health.

Outspoken rapper and heavy social-media user Kanye West is calling for an end to this dark side of social-media culture and claims to have been in contact with the heads of Instagram, Snapchat and Twitter to figure out ways to end the stress of chasing likes, comments and followers among teens.

"There are people who are committing suicide due to not getting enough likes. Seeking validation in the simulation," West shared recently, and ironically, on Twitter. "I personally want to participate in social media with the option of not having to show my followers [number] of likes."

West believes if social media platforms had the option of hiding the number of followers or likes, users would be better off.

"Having your amount of likes on display for the world to see and judge is like showing how much money you have in the bank," he said.

West shared the conversation that he had with Jack Dorsey, the CEO and one of the founders of Twitter, and with Ben Schwerin, Snapchat's head of partnerships. They both appeared to agree with West.

"[Snapchat] was never about vanity metrics defin-

The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences in Stockholm on Monday announced the Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences 2018 was awarded to U.S. economists Paul M. Romer and William D. Nordhaus. GETTY IMAGES

Researchers with MIT ties awarded Nobel Prize

William D. Nordhaus and Paul M. Romer, who both did graduate work at MIT, are the 2018 Nobel Prize winners in economics.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Two American researchers with ties to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology won the Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences on Monday.

William D. Nordhaus, 77, is a professor of economics at Yale University and was awarded the prize for his work on the interaction between climate change and the economy.

Nordhaus shares the prize with Paul M. Romer, 62, of New York University's Stern School of Business, who has researched the link between technology and the economy.

Both researchers studied at MIT, according to the school. Nordhaus received his Ph.D. in economics from MIT in 1967 and Romer completed graduate work at MIT, after which he received his doctorate in economics from the University of Chicago.

The two researchers were honored for their work that provided insight into the "causes and consequences" of both technological innovation and climate change, as well as how the two topics intersect with economics.

Nordhaus was specifically awarded the Nobel in economics "for integrating climate change into long-run macroeconomic analysis," according to the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences, and Romer for "integrating technological innovations" into economic analysis.

The two researchers helped broaden the scope of economics with their work, according to the Academy, by creating models that explain "how the market economy interacts with nature and knowledge."

Nordhaus's win marks the 37th MIT alumnus to win a Nobel Prize, according to the school, and the 90th winner with a connection to MIT.

Nordhaus completed his Ph.D. dissertation at MIT under the supervision of a future Nobel winner: Robert M. Solow, who won the prize in economic sciences in 1987.

When it comes to the Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences specifically, MIT has a track record with the award: Five people have won the Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences while working as school faculty; another 11 MIT alumni, including Nordhaus, have won the prize; and an additional seven former MIT faculty have won the Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences.

Alphabet shuts Google+ social site after user data exposed

Google will shut down the consumer version of its social network Google+ after announcing data from up to 500,000 users may have been exposed to external developers by a bug that was present for more than two years in its systems. The company said in a blog on Monday it had discovered and patched the leak in March of this year and had no evidence of misuse of user data or that any developer was aware or had exploited the vulnerability. Shares of its parent company Alphabet Inc., however, were down 1.5 percent at $1,150.75 in response to what was the latest in a run of privacy issues to hit the United States' big tech companies. "Black Lightning" season 2 premieres Tuesday night at 9 p.m. on The CW.

QUANTRELL D. COLBERT / THE CW

"Black Lightning" star Cress Williams gets us ready for season 2 of the hit superhero series.

matthew.juul@metro.us

"Black Lightning" provided a much-needed jolt of energy to the CW's ever-expanding lineup of DC Comics-inspired shows when it debuted in January. Although the series features your typical superhero action, "Black Lightning" became a critical darling for its ability to tackle important, real-world issues while also showcasing an amazing cast of diverse performers. Ahead of the premiere of season 2 on Tuesday night, we caught with Cress Williams to chat about what's in store for the super-powered principal and his family this season.

From racism to police violence, the show tackles so many of today's biggest issues. The first season's finale was especially timely, as it touched upon the crisis at the border with the story line of Black Lightning exposing the government's experiments on missing children. How does the world at large influence the direction of season 2? What's interesting is that, now that we've established everything, I guess it kind of really resembles life. People have families and they're trying to do things and maneuver through the drama of their own family, while they happen to do that in the midst of the drama that's going on in the world. That's exactly what happens in our show. All the things that are going on in Freeland, the repercussions from season 1, that snowball just keeps moving. A lot of the worldly things, the missing kids and what-not, that snowball keeps moving. But, our family dynamic gets even more complicated and that becomes a major thing that we're having to deal with in the midst of society and in the midst of the world. It really makes for a lot more dense and complicated story line.

Jefferson Pierce picked up a few new superpowers along the way during season 1. Are there any cool new moves you can tease heading into season 2?

We established flight last season, so we'll see some more of that and some new things as well that I don't want to spoil. It's always building and evolving over time. Season 2 picks up about a week after everything that happened at the end of season 1, so it's a lot about trying to resume life as normal, but realizing that's not even going to be possible. We have to define a new normal.

Any chance we'll see Static Shock show up in Freeland any time soon? That would be cool! I don't want anybody to get too excited. What I'm saying right now is not founded on any info. It's really just my creative idea. I think it would be a cool idea at some point. Just the fact that Jefferson is an educator and a mentor, and we've established that in Freeland there's metas and things like that, I think it would be a natural thing. But nobody's really confirmed that. God willing, we have a lot of seasons to go. This season, we still have a lot to go on with the family and we're ramping up to a really great season 2 ending, so I don't think something like that would happen this season. But I do hope down the line, after we've firmly, firmly established the rest of the family and their powers and their story lines, I think that could happen. I think it would be really fun.

"Black Lightning" seems to be part of this wave of amazing projects to really showcase and celebrate diversity on the big and small screens. What are your thoughts on Hollywood's attitudes on diversity in 2018?

What's really amazing is that we all live in this world and, I don't know about you, but what was always kind of frustrating over time is that my friends and my communities, the people that I know around me that I see when I'm out in the world, are incredibly diverse. But film and television didn't really represent that. I think the goal of film and television is to really, most of the time, be a mirror to what the world looks like. What's kind of cool is that it's starting to do that. I say starting because it still has a long way to go. I hope that with the success of diversity [in film and television] that people don't get complacent because it'll just swing back. We have to be diligent and know that there's progress, but still a lot of progress that has to be made. All we really want is just for the screen to accurately reflect what's going on in the world, the makeup of the world.

I think what's really fueling it is that when these diverse endeavors are put out there, they prove to be successful. That's what generates more success. Unfortunately, the bottom line is the dollar. So if these things don't produce the dollars, then it makes it that much harder for the next person to break new foundations. Now that they are producing dollars, hopefully it will just light a fire and we keep moving in that direction.

Amber Heard talks 'London Fields' and how Hollywood deals with harassment

The 32-year-old actress opens up about her new film and the industry's issues with harassment.

MARIA POZINA MWN
letters@metro.us

"London Fields," the new mystery-thriller directed by Mathew Cullen and written by Roberta Hanley, is set to hit the big screen on Oct. 26. The film is based on the 1989 novel of the same name by Martin Amis and tells the story of Nicola Six (Amber Heard), a mysterious girl who has an irresistible attraction for men. Metro chatted with Heard to learn more.

You play a very difficult character. How would you describe Nicola? I think Nicola is an antihero, she constantly wants to influence people. Sometimes she uses her own sexuality to get what she wants. On one hand, she is very strong, but on the other she finds herself in a certain situation not willing to be there. Obviously, Nicola is a very attractive woman, and her image is inseparably associated with sexuality. Even her surname — Six — sounds almost like "sex." She is trapped in this image. Even the idea of death seems more attractive to her than the thought of fading female sexuality. So you can call her strong, or weak, depending.

Are you like her?

I like to play strong heroines who are constantly acting. This is something that I may have in common with Nicola. Just playing yourself is boring.

In this film, you had wonderful partners. For example, Billy Bob Thornton.

Yes, he is an excellent actor. His character in the film is both a narrator and an actor. We are all very lucky that Billy Bob worked with us.

What was the most difficult thing about working on this movie?

"London Fields" is a film adaptation of Martin Amis' novel of the same name. And it's always difficult to work on screen versions. But our director did a good job. Mathew did something special with the classic book on mystical murder. He brought his own way of narrating this story, and that's why I originally got interested in this project.

"I'm shocked by the reality in which we live. But at the same time, I am inspired by the progress that already exists."

You've been called one of the sexiest actresses of our time. And being attractive in Hollywood sounds dangerous now due to the many scandals associated with harassment.

To be honest, I'm shocked by the reality in which we live. But at the same time, I am inspired by the progress that already exists. We finally began to cover the problem of harassment. I am amazed that people who behave unacceptably tried to protect and hide their actions, just to preserve the status quo. This was done at the cost of insulting women, people of other races and other minorities. The community is finally starting to hear their problems and discuss them.

Emily Kinney talks new album, touring and whether she's down for a return to 'The Walking Dead'

The actress and musician is back with a new record, "Oh, Jonathan."

patrick.king@metro.us

Since leaving "The Walking Dead," actress Emily Kinney has hit the ground running to reinvent herself as a singer-songwriter. What is so astonishing about Kinney's transition is that she arrived a fully-formed and convincing songwriter right out of the gate.

Kinney is on the road promoting her third full-length album, "Oh, Jonathan," and will be playing The Sinclair in Cambridge on Wednesday, Oct. 10.

Your new album has such huge lush sound that matches your narrative lyric style. Which artists influenced you for this album?

I took a while to write this one, and I had been experimenting a lot. I'd say that the artists that really influenced me are this band — and they don't necessarily sound like my music, but I was thinking about them a lot — Frightened Rabbit. They're a Scottish rock band. Their lyrics and the way they paint stories and their sounds, they create a world that all of the songs live in. Also, Regina Spektor. She's one of my favorite artists. She also is very lyric-driven but able to create these worlds with the instrumentation that she picks.

What came first for you, songwriting or acting?
I would say music came first as far as what was the gateway into performing. When I was little I wasn't necessarily into acting at first, I was into learning songs and singing them to my parents.

When I first moved to New York, I was definitely pursuing acting and I would go to auditions.

But then I would go to Rockwood, Pete's Candy Store and other music clubs to see friends play. I started singing backup for people. Eventually, when I was doing "Spring Awakening" on Broadway, a lot of those actors had music projects, and that's what inspired me to do my own music. That was all before "The Walking Dead." As my acting career grew, that opened me up to much bigger audiences. So I definitely did start to feel some motivation because there was an audience there.

A lot of people romanticize the life of the working actress or touring musician. Now that you have been both, has this put things into perspective for you?

I guess the biggest thing that I've learned is figuring out what aspects of each actually make me really happy. I do like being on set. I realized that I really like the work of it. For touring, I like it once we are actually at the venue.

But you know, when you're doing that all of the time, then you kind of long for other things. I always tell people I love going grocery shopping. Because when I'm acting, I'm on set. Just being home and being able to make your own coffee and go to the grocery store. Getting to actually see your friends and be involved in your friends' lives in a more everyday — or even just weekly — way is actually really special and awesome. I think when you don't have that, you realize how much the everyday normal things are so special.

Jon Bernthal is reprising his role on this season of "The Walking Dead." Would you ever return to the show?

I mean, I would love to! I love the show and I'm really proud to be a part of that group of actors. So, yeah! As far as I know right now, I'm not doing it. But, I would be down!

Balance the key for Pats

As great as Tom Brady is, the Patriots play best when No. 12 doesn't have to do it all.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

The best Patriots offense is one where there is balance between throwing the ball and running the ball, even though they still employ the greatest quarterback of all time.

Tom Brady has had the best games of his career when he is efficient, completing over 65 percent of his passes, and limiting his interceptions. Brady passed for a season-high 341 yards last Thursday against the Colts but was kicking himself afterwards for the two interceptions he threw. Against Miami nine days ago, Brady was a key factor in the 38-7 blowout win but did throw two interceptions.

In fact, through five games this season, Brady has thrown six interceptions. In his MVP season last year, he didn't throw pick No. 6 until Dec. 11 (Week 14).

"Those turnovers, whether it's an interception or fumbled snap — I think that's been something that we have to correct," Brady told WEEI's Kirk and Calahan. "If you look back at the first five games, we're just giving away too many scoring opportunities, and that's limiting our points. I thought the other night [against the Colts] we should have put 52

[points] out there at least, maybe more. And when we play a team like Kansas City, we've got to take advantage of every scoring opportunity, because we know they are."

The picks aren't the only thing different with Brady this year. The Pats are throwing the ball less and Brady's yardage is down. Through five games last year, Brady had thrown the ball 195 times (compared to just 179 times this year), and had racked up 1,702 yards of passing (compared to just 1,259 yards this year).

That could mean that Brady's overall play is slipping slightly, but it's more likely that the Patriots are doing this strategically. They saw Brady pass for a Super Bowl record 505 yards against the Eagles this past February, but the Pats came up losers in that one. Brady did not throw an interception in the Super Bowl but connected on just 58.3 percent of his passes (he was 28-of-48 in the game).

It's entirely possible that Brady is simply taking more chances downfield this season, interception totals be damned.

Nonetheless, efficiency has always been the name of the game for Brady and the Pats. And it will be moving forward.

Back to the backfield

The Patriots ran the ball 31 times in their season-opening win over Houston, 24 times in the loss to Jacksonville, just 19 times in the loss to Detroit, a whopping 40 times in the blowout victory over Miami, and 23 times against the Colts.

So it's clear that rushing the ball is key for the Pats this season. In the last two games, Sony Michel has averaged 105.0 yards rushing. James White has averaged 72.5 yards receiving per game in the last two, primarily coming out of the backfield with glorified hand-offs.

When Brady is efficient and Michel and White are getting numerous touches out of the backfield, the Patriots are next to impossible to beat. It all comes back to balance for the Patriots.

GAME 4 TONIGHT

Aries If you try to understand what others are going through, it will be easier for you to do what's right for all concerned. Your help will be appreciated.

Taurus A delay may annoy you, but it will turn in your favor in the end. Don't lack patience; simply bide your time. Wait and be ready to act when the time is right.

Gemini Live and learn. Someone may lead you astray if you ask for suggestions or help. Take the initiative and go to the source if you want to know the truth.

Cancer Let down your guard and listen to what others have to say. You'll be offered options that will spark your imagination and encourage better relationships with the people you love most.

Leo Don't assume that you know what's going on around you. Someone will go to great lengths to cover up something that could greatly affect a decision you make.

Virgo You'll learn through observation and hands-on experience. You will have a personal growth spurt that will lead to a positive lifestyle change. Love and romance will improve your life.

Libra Take care of matters that will influence your home life or standard of living. Put in the time and effort to fix up your surroundings and add to your comfort.

Scorpio Emotions will mount, and arguments will erupt if you aren't careful with your words and reactions. Don't judge others or start something you will live to regret.

Sagittarius Look at what you can accomplish, not at what you cannot. Having a positive attitude will help you keep negative individuals from interfering in your affairs. Determination will encourage personal change.

Capricorn Don't stop when you should be sprinting. Explore your options and try new things. Show emotion and express your thoughts. Live life in the moment and to the fullest.

Aquarius Beware of anyone making unrealistic offers. Change should take place because you want it to, not because someone is pressuring you to do something that you don't like.

Pisces Take advantage of whatever comes your way. Set up meetings and negotiate with confidence. Let others know your worth. Embrace love and make a commitment. EUGENIA LAST
